Eight Ways to Ruin Your Reputation by Tom Schreck

As an official all you have is your reputation. Screw it up and say goodbye to assignments and your career. Here are eight sure-fire ways to ruin what you worked so hard for.

1. Be high maintenance. The men and women who assign you to games and evaluate your performance have jobs to do, deadlines to meet and their own series of constituents to answer to. Do you realize that every time you make their lives harder, their days more frustrating and their hours filled with tedium, they're remembering the source of their anguish? Making your supervisors' lives easier fortifies your reputation while doing things that they find annoying works against it. Get your reports in on time, be punctual, return phone calls and do what needs to be done even when you find it a pain in the neck.

2. Talk too much. Opinions are a lot like backsides - we all have one. Do your best to keep yours to yourself, especially when you're out in public. Criticizing someone else's work is tacky and it reveals more about you than it does the subject of your conversation. Officials, athletic directors (ADs) and coaches all travel in the same tight circles so when you let a "Between me and you..." go, know that it is the furthest thing from being just among friends. Follow what your mom said and don't say anything - especially about another official - if you can't say something nice.

3. Create problems off-the-field. Remember you've chosen to be an official. so don't pretend you're not in a visible profession. Yes, your free time is your own but don't be so naive as to believe that what you do away from your assignments won't impact your reputation. Those keg stand photos on Facebook, the tweets about making it rain at the dance club and that arrest for public lewdness will affect how people see you between the lines.

4. Fraternalize. Hey, we're all human and we all crave interaction. Our assignments involve a lot of alone time on the road and the conversations with the Marriott clerk just doesn't always cut it. It is natural to want to chat up folks that you see on a semi-regular basis but remember your responsibility is to oversee a contest in an unbiased fashion. High fives and fist bumps with coaches and ADs get noticed and as innocent as they can be, they get interpreted.

5. Look terrible. Certainly by now you know to keep your uniform in such a way as to communicate your professionalism. It extends off the field and court too, you know. Showing up to your assignment with your ripped concert T shirt and flip flops may make you feel hip, but don't expect folks not to gossip about your sartorial statement. Everything you do communicates something. Make sure it's communicating professionalism.

6. Don't treat people right. Whether it's the ballboy showing you to the broom closet that will double as your dressing room, the waitress at the restaurant where you're getting your pregame meal or the new official working his or her first assignment, no one appreciates mistreatment. Using "please," "Thank You" and "Excuse me" goes a long way and their absence goes even further in people's memories. The golden rule is accepted universally and not using it will get you remembered for all the wrong reasons.

7. Be all about the money. Every official somewhere along their career got short-changed on mileage, a hotel room or a fair night's pay because of the unlucky dealing of some cards. We all have to write the checks for clinics and associations every year and we all know the realities of today's economy. We're all in the same boat and very few of us are getting rich officiating. Cherry picking assignments or complaining about paying dues is classless and it will cost you more than the amount you write on your check.

8. Be arrogant and unapproachable. The games aren't about us; they're about the players, coaches and institutions involved. Emotions run hot and high and sometimes people need to vent about what's going on. Let them. Doing the Mount Rushmore act when someone wants to talk something over is just arrogant. Hear them out, be flesh and blood and be about building relationships, not about being the one who was right.

Aflac Has Landed at WOA

AFLAC has designed a web site for officials interested in looking into the benefits currently being offered to WOA members. Please take the time to visit the web site if you are interested in finding out more about these options. The web site is: www.aflac.com/woa.

Please contact Steve Pohlman if you would like to discuss these options or are looking for additional information. Steve can be reached at 206.310.9981 or steven_pohlman@us.aflac.com

Steve will also be in attendance at the upcoming Region meetings to provide a brief overview of the program.

Note from the Executive Director:

Congratulations to all the winter state tournament officials and judges. Great job reaching the pinnacle of the high school season. Thank you to all the officials and judges that worked throughout the season in order to get the teams to this point, your efforts are truly appreciated.

The RTO Basketball Program was well received by the officials who were observed and the information gathered will help in developing the program as we move forward. There is still a lot of work ahead of us in order to make this program beneficial for the officials, as well as the players and coaches. Please make sure to direct any comments or suggestions to your local assigner. It is important that the local associations/boards participate in the development of the RTO Program.

As we move into the spring season and eventually the end of the 2012-13 school year, it is important to begin looking at the things we can improve on for the future. The top priority for staff is to figure out a solution for the online clinics and tests. Significant changes occurred at the beginning of the 2012-13 school year that has adversely impacted the development of the clinics. With such late notice of the changes, there was little staff could do to implement a new process. Staff is looking to have a solution prior to the May Executive Board meeting so next year's clinic development is not delayed as it was this year. We apologize for the delays and the inconvenience this may have caused and promise to find a remedy for the current situation.

Have fun at the upcoming tournaments and maybe I will see some of you as I jump from site to site.
